

"In early 2010, Novartis Animal Health employed AgriNetworks on a contract basis to conduct New Zealand field trials investigating the efficacy of a range of anthelmintics in sheep. In collaboration, a practical, scientifically valid protocol was drawn up, agreed to and importantly, strictly adhered to for the duration of the study. Communication was open, honest and timely on all occasions, with a comprehensive final report being delivered in a similarly timely manner. Of particular value was the expert interpretation of the results and their implications in a broader farm context. I would have no hesitation in using AgriNetworks for similar work in the future."
